

Save Ryton Gardens

We formed South East Essex Organic Gardeners (SEEOG) in 1994 to promote the principles of organic gardening, which include the composting of organic waste, the protection of wildlife, the reduction of pollution and the encouragement of species diversity.

Your garden is your own little patch of the world to look after. Most gardens are quite small, but there are 15 million of them in the UK. If all of these gardens were cared for organically, it would create a much better environment – for our families, plants and wildlife.

We are affiliated to Garden Organic, 'the national charity for organic growing, we provide a range of programmes to enhance individuals, communities and the environment through organic growing.'

But are you aware of what's going on now at Ryton?

Lawrence Hills established Ryton Gardens in 1985 as home for the charity he founded, the Henry Doubleday Research Association, later to become Garden Organic. But the Board of Trustees has asked Garden Organic's management team to look at the options.
